Internet Addiction

Internet Addiction Disorder or IAD (also known as 'pathological Internet use') is a disorder that affects millions of Internet users throughout the world. Often, people joke about being addicted to the Net, but most people don't realize that there are people out there who are essentially slaves to their computers. Often times they miss work or school, spend hours and hours online, carry on extramarital cybersex affairs, and participate in various online activities that end up affecting their own offline worlds. Make no mistake about it, Internet addiction is real, and chances are good that someone you know has it.

The symptomatic behaviors include: academic/work or interpersonal problems, neglecting friends, family, and job or personal responsibilities, withdrawal when away from the Internet, irritability when attempting to stop using the Internet, staying online more than originally intended, lying or concealing how much time you spend online, drastic lifestyle changes in order to spend more time online, a general decrease in physical activity, disregard for one's health as a result of internet activity, and sleep deprivation or a change in sleep patterns in order to spend time on the net.

There are several technologies and applications that people have become addicted to on the Internet.

Online Sex. Perhaps the most frequently reported addiction is to online sexual materials. Pornography is pervasive on the Internet, and readily available for anyone at any time.

Online games. There are several anecdotal reports of addiction to online gaming. Multi-user games in particular are most frequently cited as being the source of Internet addiction.

Online Casinos. Cases of Internet addiction involving online casinos have also appeared in the media and psychological literature. Online casinos offer virtual gambling over the Internet.

Online stock trading. The incredible rise in the U.S. stock market in the 1990's, coupled with the availability and access to stock information and online stock trading, has resulted in addiction to trading such stocks over the Internet.

Online auctions. A popular application on the Internet is the online auction. In particular the website eBay offers the widest variety of products, and maintains the largest number of regular users.
